LET *
GIRLS LEARN

WELCOME

In 2015, girls under 10 are more likely to enroll in primary school, receive key vaccinations, and are less likely to suffer from health and nutrition problems than ever before. But, today's girls still face challenges when they enter their second decade of life. This includes obtaining quality secondary and higher education, avoiding child marriage, and receiving information about puberty and reproductive health. Globally, 62 million girls are not in school. In some countries, less than 10 percent of teenage girls finish high school.

Adolescent girls have the right to a safe, educated, and healthy life, not only in their critical formative years, but also as they become women. If supported during adolescence, girls have the potential to change the world- both as today's empowered girls and as tomorrow's workers, mothers, entrepreneurs, mentors, household heads, and political leaders.

In March 2015, the President and First Lady launched Let Girls Learn, which brings together the Department of State, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), the Peace Corps, and the Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC). Recognizing that adolescent girls face multiple challenges in pursuing an education, Let Girls Learn is employing a holistic approach to support the whole girl.

The Peace Corps will train thousands of volunteers and tens of thousands of community leaders to advance girls' education and empowerment, and will work with local leaders on solutions. Peace Corps Volunteers work to identify barriers, and support community-led girls' education projects worldwide. From Volunteers helping to start a school library to organizing a technology camp for girls, this collaboration brings increased focus, resources and impact to the critical global issue of girls' education.

Peace Corps Volunteers who live and work at the grassroots level will serve as catalysts of community-led change, and every American can get involved and make a difference.

PEACE CORPS

The Peace Corps is the U.S. government's grassroots international development agency, sending the best and brightest Americans to work on agriculture, education, environment, health, and youth and community development projects in communities abroad. As part of the U.S. government's commitment to Let Girls Learn, the Peace Corps is empowering local leaders to put lasting solutions in place and helping girls to see their full potential and stay in school. Educating girls is essential to healthy and thriving communities but barriers to adolescent girls completing school are particularly significant.

The Peace Corps is working to empower leaders, work hand in hand with communities, and increase the impact of Peace Corps Volunteers. From holding girls' empowerment GLOW camps to creating safe learning environments for girls to creating girls' sports leagues, Peace Corps Volunteers are helping to Let Girls Learn.

USAID
FROM THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

U.S. AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

USAID has a long history of supporting education and improving the lives of women and girls around the world. Now, the agency is helping the 32 million girls in countries affected by armed conflict or natural disasters that have forced them from their homes and out of school. In these countries, USAID provides safe access to schools, helps rebuild education systems, and creates alternative learning programs.

Girls in developing countries face complex and often dangerous barriers to education. As a girl grows older, the fight for an education gets harder. Yet, we know that educating girls can transform lives, families, communities, and entire countries. That's why USAID is focusing on increasing access to quality education, reducing barriers to success, and empowering adolescent girls.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The Department of State represents the United States around the world. Our primary goals are to promote freedom, security, and prosperity, while supporting and protecting American interests. Adolescent girls' education is an important part of that work. That's why we engage citizens, leaders, and advocates to persuade countries to empower girls and make sure they can go to school and graduate. We also use partnerships, programs, and planning to address the many challenges facing adolescent girls around the world.

MILLENNIUM
CHALLENGE CORPORATION
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

MILLENNIUM CHALLENGE CORPORATION

The Millennium Challenge Corporation's mission is to reduce poverty through economic growth—and evidence shows us that investing in girls' education helps achieve these goals. Through its programs, Millennium Challenge Corporation maximizes educational opportunities for girls and women to help increase their economic productivity.

The agency works to improve access to education, train teachers and community leaders, reform education policies, and improve school buildings and curriculums using a gender focus. For example, in Burkina Faso, our education project built 396 classrooms in 132 schools. In Namibia, our education project increased girls' primary school enrollment by 20 percent. Currently, the agency is implementing education projects in El Salvador, Georgia, and Guatemala.

The agency also invests in water and sanitation, electricity, health, and infrastructure projects, which can have a positive impact on girls' education. For example, new running water in their homes means that girls no longer have to walk long distances to fetch water—leaving them more time to study.

GIRL CHILD PROJECT

ADJARA REGION: Making Khatchapuri

Nato, 13 years old

Gamarjoba! (Hello!) I live in adjara. My village sits high in the mountain range that separates Adjara from Samske-Javakheti in Southern Georgia.

Here, I go to a village school five days a week. For me, school is my home, and I love it very much. I study math, Georgian, geography, history, physics, chemistry, Russian, English, art, PE and music. I personally like math the best, but many other girls love history and biology.

At home, food is very important. Food is everything for a Georgian family. Girls here like making and eating potatoes. Here in Khulo, we make borani, which is a cheese and butter dish that can be fried together with other ingredients like potatoes or eggs. We also make Adjaruli khatchapuri and halva. Adjaruli khatchapuri is bread shaped like a boat baked with cheese. On the top is butter and sometimes an egg. Halva is a cookie made from toasted flour, sugar, and butter. We make halva for some religious holidays and for funeral or memorial services.

Girls in adjara love to dance. In our region dance is a very important tradition. Many girls dance and they have a lot of success. They have gone to Turkey and many other spots for dance tours. There is a dancing group called Argineti. There are many different types of dances, such as regional dances, like Adjaruli, Samaia, and Khevsuruli. For different celebrations, there are different special dances, like the wedding dance. In one dance, boys fight with swords until girls drop a white flag. This tradition came from Georgia's mountains.

UGANDA

PABO REGION: School Uniforms and Games

Akello, 15 years old

My name is Akello. My home is in Pabo, which is located in northern Uganda.

In Uganda, most schools have a required uniform. For girls this usually means a collared shirt, and skirt that goes below the knees.

I go to school at Keyo Secondary School because of the good environment and because of the school's good performance and reputation. At school we have to wear a uniform. I actually really like it! Girls have to wear navy blue skirts and white socks. We also have to wear a white button-up shirt with our school badge on the front pocket. I like the design. On the badge, it says Keyo Secondary School: Arise and Shine.

Many girls in my village have shaved their heads. Going to school means that students shave off their hair to keep everyone looking the same.

While in school I like chatting with friends. It doesn't matter who it is: I like chatting with boys and girls. I just love being around my friends! When I am free, I like reading books.

After school we like to dance! There are many traditional dances in Uganda. Another activity is playing games after school. We also love to play with jump ropes! You can either play by yourself or skip with your friends. If we can't find a Hula-Hoop, we use old tires instead. They are actually a lot of fun!

When I get home I like to cook "boo," a green leafy vegetable. I like to cook it because it is very nice and tasty! A major task every day is sorting through boo. Mostly, I help my mother and father with the work. I love to help with the cooking. I like to smear the house (to repair the mud walls) and also to help fetch water and collect firewood.
